

Perplexity After 50: Quick Start Guide

Wise Years Living | Search smarter. Check the sources.

ASK	Ask one clear, specific question. Add context and say what kind of sources you want.
CHECK	Open the citations. Check who published them, when they were updated, and whether they support the claim.
COMPARE	For important information, compare with a second reliable source - preferably an official or primary source.
ACT	Act only after confirming the information is current and appropriate for your situation.

5 Starter Prompts

1. Explain this topic in plain English for a beginner over 50. Include reliable sources.
2. Compare these two options using official or primary sources when possible. Separate facts from opinions.
3. Find at least two reliable sources supporting this information. Tell me if they disagree.
4. Separate your answer into confirmed facts, things that may vary, and things I should verify before acting.
5. Which source is strongest for each important claim, and why?

Citation Check

- Who published the source?
- When was it published or updated?
- Does the source actually support the AI's claim?
- Is there a stronger official or primary source?

Privacy & Safety

Do not paste Social Security numbers, passwords, bank or credit-card numbers, security codes, or other unnecessary sensitive information into an AI service. For medical, legal, financial, benefits, tax, or other high-stakes decisions, verify with authoritative sources and qualified professionals.

Remember: A citation makes an answer easier to verify. It does not guarantee the answer is correct.
